The greater the pressure of the population upon the land the greater will tend to be the restrictions imposed by law upon the freedom of landlords. In favor of the policy of peasant proprietorship will be urged its apparent success in France and Belgium, and the modern movement for the re-creation of small holdings in England. I feel it necessary to point out here that such arguments will be wholly fallacious, because they do not take into account the very different economic conditions prevailing in Europe. The British Isles and all the Western countries of the continent of Europe - Germany, Holland, Belgium, France, Spain and Portugal - are essentially countries with a maritime sea-board; and their economic development during the past fifty years has been largely conditioned by the growing cheapness of ocean transport. The cultivation of the...
