RareBooksClub. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 86 pages. OCLC Number: 53140502 Excerpt: . . . Since the September 11th terrorist attacks, homeland security - including Overview of the Presidents securing our nations borders - has become a critical issue. To mobilize and Homeland Security Strategy organize our nation to secure the homeland from attack, the administration and the Homeland Security 5 issued, in July 2002, a federal strategy for homeland security. Act Subsequently, the Congress passed and the President signed the Homeland Security Act, which established DHS in January 2003. Among other things, the strategy provides for performance of six mission areas, each aligned with a strategic objective, and identifies major initiatives associated with these mission areas. One of the mission areas is border and transportation 6 security. For the border and transportation security mission area, the strategy and the act specify several objectives, including ensuring the integrity of our borders and preventing the entry of unwanted persons into our country. To accomplish this, the strategy provides for, among other things, reform of immigration services, large-scale modernization of border crossings, and 7 consolidation of federal watch lists. It also acknowledges that accomplishing these goals will require overhauling the border security process. This will be no small task, given that the United States shares a 5, 525 mile border with Canada and a 1, 989 mile border with Mexico and has 95, 000 miles of shoreline. Moreover, each year, more than 500 million people legally enter our country, 330 million of them noncitizens. More than 85 percent enter via land borders, often as daily commuters. Our nations current border security process for controlling the entry and Overview of the Border exit of individuals consists of four primary functions: (1) issuing visas, Security Process...
