Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Stemmata Craufurdeania: Of the Annals of the Noble Family of Crawford Arms: (Craufurd of Craufurdland, County Ayr; Braehead, Midlothian, and descendants of Crawford lineage). Gules, a fess ermine. Crest: A marble pillar supporting a man's heart ppr. Motto: Stant innixa Deo. The recent discovery in an old illuminated manuscript at the British Museum, in the Cotton Collection, of the Arms of Stephen, third Earl of Richmond, (gules a bend ermine), died 1104, and their close similitude to the Coat borne by the Craufurds, coupled with other corroborative circumstances, has left absolutely no doubt that the old Earls of Richmond and the ancient houses of Craufurd, Crawford, and Crawford sprang from a common progenitor. The most remote ancestor of the Craufurds in Scotland was Reginald, fourth and youngest son of Alan, the fourth Earl of Richmond (d. 1146). He accompanied David I. to the North when that Prince entered his kingdom, followed, says Chalmers, by a thousand Norman knights, whom he provided for and established in his dominions for their civilization and protection. Reginald received...
